Introduction

Organizations face several challenges, the most important of which is the inability to develop management practices that keep pace with sustainable development and their connection to modern management processes, as well as adapting to changes in management systems particularly in enhancing the capacities of their members in innovation and excellence.

The conference aims to provide participants from various job levels with exposure to global developments in sustainable modern management systems, sustainable management techniques, and innovation, in addition to gaining insight into regional experiences.

Furthermore, the workshop aims to equip participants with modern leadership and management skills, benefit from Scotland's experience in these areas, and develop participants' abilities in problem-solving and decision-making. Through specialized themes, the conference will also provide participants with the latest trends in innovation and development, a deeper understanding of the nature of management processes, and enhanced capacities for employees in both public and private institutions.

Key Objectives:

- Developing modern leadership and management skills.
- Transforming the traditional management model of institutions and enhancing the ability to conduct analysis and development studies.
- Fostering the fundamentals of creative and innovative thinking and enhancing the intellectual skills of innovative leaders.
- Acquiring the qualities of innovators and understanding their impact on entrepreneurship.
- Learning how to achieve distinguished and innovative management in a rapidly changing world.

Topics:

- Modern management skills in the British system
- Planning and organizational skills
- The Capability Maturity Model Integration (CMMI)
- Decision-making and problem-solving skills
- Organizational Change Management (OCM)
- The sustainable leadership and management model.
- Time management and negotiation skills
- Acquired skills for leadership development
